Alice Taylor likes to paint landscapes, portraits and still-life during those moments when light best captures the subjects' beauty. She also finds that fruits, vegetables and flowers, especially those fresh from the garden, possess humor and aesthetic quality. She loves the smell of turpentine and linseed oil, and the way color flows over white paper in water. Her art, when exhibited, has occasionally merited a prize or comment. Self-taught, she has painted since the age of 4, which was a long time ago.
